DAILY LEADER.

One fine day lately, among the heather near Maybury, the Queen's son performed the ceremony of opening the Royal Dra-matic College. It was a glorious atmi-mer's day, and the good work in hand gave rise to many agreeable feelings and pleasant reflections. It was pleasant, first pleasant reflections. It was pleasant, first of all, at the Waterloo station, to notice how completely the clerks were mentally knocked over by the sight of so many of their stage favorites crowding around their boxes and offering to pay for tickets. They didn't like to take, money; wondered, I dare say, that such delightful creatures as actors and actresses should be required to raw for anything. They were uired to pay for anything. They were "Lady Macbeth" sweeping up to you and demanding a first-class return ticket to Woking! "Norma" following with a like request! The gentle "Juliet" sweetly leaning over your box, as if it were a balcony and you were "Remee!" "Box"

The allowance to each pensioner, besides his furnished apartments, is ten and "Cox" meeting in the narrow passage, as if they were in "Mrs. Bouncer's" lodg-speak made. Its price is only Throuts, and such the continue of the continue o long had the repusttion of being a healthy spot, and this is borne out in a remarkable pression that I was in a sweep, and had vague feeling of disappointment when I was brought back safe and sound, that I manner by the fact that the pensioners have greatly improved in health and strength since they have become immates had not won something. I say I don't know what prompted me to take an insur-ance ticket on this occasion. Entertaining. of the Dramatic College. I only heard of one invalid, and the medicine prescribed for him by the doctor is one bottle of good sound spirits weekly, which is duly dis-pensed by the committee. These are great results, and highly bon-orable to the actors themselves, through Entertaining as I do, a high opinion of the members of the theatrical profession, I could not have been troubled with the suspicion that the country actors, pining for London, knowing that a great body of town celebrities were going down that day, might have conspired to place a stone upon the rails. It certainly was suggested during the journey that there was an alarming degree of imprudence in putting so many precious eggs into one frail basket—but that was the suggestion of a dramatic author, who was probably thinking of his chest of drawers full of pieces.

"What!" I said, "are you norvous, too?" meaning that I was.

"No," she said; "but I must think of the chicks at home." They were all thinking of their chicks, of those who were near and dear to them, and of their poor brethren. This interest in their own class was manifested in many ways. A comedian who sat opposite to ne pointed out with evident pleasure the cottages of some of his colleagues who had a dozen "Poloniuses" the Prince marched up the central hall, where Mr. Benjamin Webster presented him with a golden key. With this he opened the door—which being a door intimately connected with the stage, was not locked—and entered to find the hall already occupied by a brilliant assemblage of what I may call beauty and talent. The Prince, having taken up his location under a regal canopy, Mr. Webster advanced and read an address, informing his Royal Highness that the work in which his deceased father had taken a great and special interest, was now nearly completed. The three objects contemplated in the erection of the college were—a retreat for aged and infirm actors; schools for the education of the children of accordance with the effect of the stage; and a central hall which should include a library and a gallery of works of art. The first of these was accomplished; for the second, funds were in the course of accumulation; and the third, which crowned the edifice, was
